Facebook-Another Dimension to the Cedars Community

By Winston Price

I'm wondering if my home is typical of Cedars homes as we approach the year 2010. In the evening, we eat a quick supper, hopefully all together as a family, and rush off to Bible study, youth events, practices or meetings. Then, to cap it all off before bed, we check our Facebook page. I can't include myself in the 'we' because I'm the only one who doesn't have a facebook account in my family. I usually revert to glancing over someone's shoulder and snooping. "oh; What's so and so up to?" I may ask. A part of me is fascinated with this form of networking, and yet I hesitate to sign up.

Lately Facebook has become more front and center in my role as Vice Principal here at Cedars as well. A few times now, I have received calls from concerned parents who have noticed comments on Facebook from students that have been very inappropriate, or have been slanderous to Cedars. Typically, I have contacted related parents to give them a head's up with the situation. However, the types of comments found on Facebook by students, sent to other Cedars students, are raising questions as to the school's role in dealing with the content found on Facebook. Are the interactions between students that occur after school hours on Facebook open to scrutiny in relation to the student commitment form that High School students sign each year? Does the school have an obligation to deal with inappropriate interactions on Facebook that are occurring 24/7? Is informing parents enough? Do parents have the computer savvy to monitor and enforce guidelines for their children's online activity? Are parents fully aware of the dangers out there?

Recently, I attended a workshop that addressed some of these issues. I realized more fully that the 'Net Generation' communicate differently and think differently than previous generations. Our students on Facebook are part of a network of 300,000,000 around the globe. Many of the students who network online are not monitored closely by their parents, and students need to be trained to use better discretion while online to avoid the inherent dangers. It was agreed by all at the workshop that parents and school authorities need to become more aware and to facilitate further workshops in regards to this issue.

On Thursday, January 7th at 7:00pm, we have tentative plans to host a workshop targeted for parents and teachers around the issues mentioned above. The presenter will be Bill De Jager, Director of Learning at the Society of Christian Schools in BC. Parents, please mark this date on your calendar and plan to come out to learn more.
